PILOT PROGRAM TO ASSIST WITH ADVISING FRESHMEN PLANNED FOR NEXT FALL

A new method of advising incoming freshmen will be piloted on campus next Fall.

Information gleaned from the admissions files, such as S.A.T. scores and high school grades of incoming freshmen as well as other information applicable to new students' academic goals, will be used to give advisers a sound, useful file for each incoming student. They will be able to help students design a program tailored to their individual needs and goals.

The first step will be for a three-person team comprised of Catherine Gannon, Assoc. Dean, Academic Planning; Theron Pace, Counselor, Placement; and Harold Jambor, Lecturer, Sociology, to personally review over 300 files of the 1978 freshman class. That data will be used to determine which patterns are most useful in predicting students' strengths or weaknesses in academic achievement.

The files of those admitted for the 1979 freshman class will be screened for similar patterns and the information will become part of each freshman's advising file.

The adviser can use this predictive information not only for class scheduling, but also for career and special interest planning.

The program is being initiated under a grant from the Chancellor's Office, under the direction of Dr. Gannon.
